CAN I Learn to Fly?

The Correct Take-Off
MODERN airplanes appear to take off so easily, when an experienced pilot is at the controls, the maneuver seems easy. Just getting the plane into the air is easy, but there is a knack to it, the same as there is to shifting gears on an automobile.

"The secret of a good take-off is holding the plane in a straight line while running along the ground," my instructor began as we were about to start.

"Your rudder movements will have to be more pronounced on the ground because it has less lift there. We kick the rudder first one way, then the other, to hold it in a straight course."

I opened the throttle and at the same time pushed the stick forward. As we started the tail came up to its normal position, which kept the fuselage parallel to the ground. As we picked up speed it was cautioned to let the stick come back slowly to normal. It will do so of its own accord if not held forward. As it reached neutral we bounced slightly once or twice, then were in the air and climbing slowly.

"Keep the wings level. Kick the rudder quickly if the nose swings away from your course. Try to keep it level at that red barn over there," came through the speaking tube.

Holding a straight course both on the ground and in the air was more difficult than I had suspected. Just as I had the plane level on the ground, it would dip, and in making the correction I would forget about the rudder and the nose of the plane would swing to one side or the other.

"You will notice you have to hold pressure on the right rudder pedal to keep to your course," my instructor said. "That is necessary to offset torque caused by the propeller. Kick the rudder quickly and at the first sign of turning. If the nose starts to swing right, kick left rudder. If left, kick right rudder. But do it quickly and repeat it if necessary. Keep the wings level. Don't climb too rapidly."

We leveled out, made one turn about the pattern, and cut the motor in idling for the glide to land. He made the landing with me "following through" on the controls.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK
Mrs. Leta Dean, Mrs. Caroline Ritchie, Mrs. Bernice Davis and Mrs. Edith Smith were recent callers on Mrs. Velma Davis.

Edward Radloff and friend from Bangor came to visit his sister, Mrs. Bernice Davis and family this week, since leaving the place about a year ago Mr. Radloff has been in several places but reports he has always been able to secure plenty of work under good working conditions.

Thomas Davis, one of the members of the Senior class of West Paris High School, is confined to his home here with mumps. Guyson is getting along nicely and will return to his studies in the near future. "Pete" Andrews, a Sophomore at the same school, was also a victim of the malady, but has fully recovered and is again back to class work.

Several from this place attended the drama, "Bachelors' Hall," played by the senior class of Woodstock High School at Bryant Pond Saturday evening, Jan. 31. They report the play most excellent. The parts were well taken, showing painstaking work of an admirable cast.

George Tull has for his camp on the Bear, Whitman place to Ernest Brooks, who will occupy it with his brother Henry while cutting birch for John Hathaway, local commissioner of Woodstock.

Nelson Perham and son McFord were recently seen working on the roads, hanging up those places which had become so rutted by the heavy mud trucks to the main road to traffic.

Mr. Fred Perham has engaged a truck and for carrying this spring, having a city, purchased a new truck motor and a new truck for the same.

"Mabel" Briggs of Lewis Corner, West Paris, is spending winter at Mount Pleasant, Maine, where she is teaching at the school.

Arthur Toulson is now teaching at the same place, where he is also a member and organist.

A woman teacher is planning to leave the place, and a new teacher is expected to come.

John Briggs, who has been teaching at the school, is now teaching at the school.

Stops Headache in Five Minutes

A Wonderful Formula Ends Aches and Pains Almost Like Magic. Something Better and Safer. Thousands of men and women are now stopping "throbbing, sick, dizzy, splitting headache," as well as the excruciating pains of rheumatism, neuritis, toothache, etc., with a marvelous new formula that is said to be far superior to anything heretofore used.

It contains no aspirin, acetanilid, etc., and is absolutely safe and harmless. This remarkable formula, called A-VOL, is being prescribed by thousands of doctors, dentists and welfare nurses because of the quick, efficient way it relieves all types of aches and pains without depressing the heart, or causing any other harmful effects. A-VOL quickly stops the most severe pain, leaving the patient refreshed and feeling fine. Especially effective in women's period pains.

"To quickly prove to yourself that this is truly a remarkable formula, just stop into your nearest drug store and get a package of A-VOL for a few cents. Take a couple of tablets right there. If your pain is not gone in five minutes, the clerk will return your money."

THE MYSTERIOUS IMPULSE

By Fannie Hurst

EVERYONE in the hotel bowed in acknowledgment to Eleanor Morley's impeccable quality of sweetness in her treatment of her mother. This included Mrs. Midgely herself, who recognized how fortunate she was in possessing a daughter like Eleanor. And there was plenty of time for reflection like this to flow through the brain of Mrs. Midgely. To her as accustomed to leisure as she, the days offered plenty of leisure to her countless things she had never found the moments to do during the years she was struggling as a widow to rear Eleanor, educate her and keep going the small Connecticut farm left her by her husband, who had died of exposure trying to coax fecundity from a sparse and rocky bosom.

Since Eleanor's marriage to the Spencer Morley of the well-known chocolate mint, Mrs. Midgely was entitled to feel that she was more than compensated in leisure, repose and comfort for the long lean years when she had carried on her small and patient-looking shoulders duties that should have been shared by three or four.

The Morleys and Mrs. Midgely occupied a spacious three-room suite on the bay-window corner on the eighth floor of a modern uptown apartment hotel. They shared a common bath of white tile with an inlay of green ducks swimming above the tub. The sitting room contained a bright bay window, with Eleanor's growing plants and a canary bird. There was a piano strewn with Eleanor's music, a small white poodle dog which slept twenty hours a day on a pink silk cushion and a small printed sign nailed to the door which held out to the guests not only rules and regulations, but every offer of comfort. Eleanor and Spencer occupied a nice square bedroom, rather dark because it faced a court, furnished in Circassian walnut. Mrs. Midgely's room, smaller still, and, it must be admitted, darker still, had no window at all, but a practical skylight through which, if you peered hard enough, you could see a faint gleam of stars against the opaque glass.

For this suite, furnished, the Morleys paid the sum of eight thousand dollars a year. That meant that Mrs. Midgely prepared the three breakfasts to the bathroom, over an electric ring, laying Turkish towels along the transom to keep the coffee smell from percolating into the corridors, thus indicting them for violation of the "No Cooking in Rooms" rule. Lunch Mrs. Midgely and Eleanor took in a small cafeteria two or three blocks away from the hotel. At evening the three of them, mother, daughter and son-in-law, emerged quite grandly down into the main dining room of the hotel for a table d'hôte dinner that began with an elaborate appetizer and marched on through soup, fish, fowl and dessert to a finale of bridge in the lobby, a motion picture or, occasionally, a theater.

Mrs. Midgely did not play cards, but even with her daughter and son-in-law much in demand for that pastime, evenings in the hotel were seldom tedious. There were women of Mrs. Midgely's own age—many of them similarly situated or living on incomes of their own—to talk with, to say nothing of odds and ends of elderly men, eager to pass the time of day or night. Sometimes a group of the older folk made up a party among themselves and attended a motion picture. This always delighted Eleanor, who often rushed around organizing the party herself.

Sweet girl, Eleanor! And Spencer, too, was all that could be desired in a son-in-law. To be sure, he was sometimes a little abrupt when things that had to do with business were on his mind. Mrs. Midgely sometimes suspected he came home with a white of liquor on his breath. But, in the main, he was a kind, good fellow, highly tolerant of the fact that from the first day of her marriage Eleanor had been embowered with the presence of a third person. And Eleanor was in love and in a perpetual state of bedazzlement over the change of fortune which had hurried her from the life of the small farm in Connecticut to the apartment hotel where existence was lubricated and moved forward easily, even luxuriously.

If it bewildered Mrs. Midgely to find her old-fashioned sitting day through like a well-fed, sleepy dog on the upholstered chairs of their apartment or on the upholstered divans of the lobbies, she knew that the mere thought was an ungrateful one. Mrs. Midgely's hands, even though they were mottled now by the blood of the hotel beauty parlor, still bore traces of the manual labor they had done in those years when she was struggling to rear Eleanor.

It seemed sacrilegious to regard the sitting about as tedious. Eleanor did not. She was another girl. Her bright hair was alic and electric with vitality. Her legs, in their sheer silk stockings, flashed about eagerly as their missions of enjoyment and pleasure. And she was personally sweet and thoughtful about her mother, too. Sometimes Mrs. Midgely would wake up from her afternoon nap to find a fresh box of chocolates on the table beside her bed and a motion picture magazine. This was Eleanor's way of filling in a possible hiatus in her mother's time while she was passing an afternoon away at a bridge or matinee party, with this pleasant invitation to lie longer abed and munch chocolate, and read the picture magazine.

Then something happened that created quite a serious situation between Mrs. Midgely and her son-in-law. Mrs. Midgely weepfully confided to her daughter later, probably Spencer had been in the right, but he had not have been so rough about it.

With tears of sympathy in her bright blue eyes, Eleanor assured her mother that that was Spencer's "way." He had not meant to be blunt. Mrs. Midgely realized that that was probably true, because later her son-in-law apologized and sent her roses. But the heart within her lay sore.

An old gentleman in the hotel, a Mr. Mosely, a man of sixty, of refinement, a widower of twenty years, no children, one of the cronies with whom Mrs. Midgely was in the habit of sitting about while the younger folks played cards, developed the immediate need of one thousand dollars. A mortgage had fallen due some few weeks before certain remittances of his were scheduled to arrive from South America.

There was in Mrs. Midgely's savings bank exactly twelve hundred dollars to her credit, her sole patrimony in the form of money which she had received from the sale of her Connecticut farm; money she told herself often, that lay between her and complete dependence on Spencer.

Figure it out later as she would, Mrs. Midgely could not, for the life of her, realize how it had come about that she and old Mr. Mosely had walked across the street to her bank where she had drawn out the thousand dollars.

There was something so appealing about Mr. Mosely, the fine white snow of his hair, his eager yet without embarrassed eyes, his desire to hold on to the small Vermont holding which was dear to him because of memories.

Not that Mr. Mosely had suggested the loan. On the contrary, it had all come about through the incident of his showing Mrs. Midgely some snapshots of the old place in Vermont.

It stabbed her to see this place, the small rambling farmhouse, the sugar trees, the copious burns, the flowing meadows, the little detached summer kitchen with buckets of drinking water on a bench in front of it, reminding not only of Mrs. Midgely's own home, but of something deeper and more atavistic. Here was the typical home of the ancestors of Mrs. Midgely. Desire for that kind of home ran in her veins. Great-grandmothers and great-grandfathers of Mrs. Midgely had lugged buckets of drinking water to benches outside of summer kitchens.

Anyway, the impulse to come to the rescue of Mr. Mosely was bigger than Mrs. Midgely. Almost before she realized it, the deal was accomplished and the little old man, with white hair like snow and a tear in his eye, had kissed her hand.

Of course, it transpired that the farm in Vermont was not worth anything. Serenely, sterile land, full of barns, broken fences. Spencer had been right. His anger justified. Mrs. Midgely had to endure the humiliation of beholding her son-in-law in a position to say, "I told you so." He never said it, except by his manner. Eleanor, tireless in her effort to act as buffer between these two, saw to it that he did not.

What happened in the end was again as bewildering to Mrs. Midgely as had been the incident of giving over the thousand dollars. She only knew that here, in the face of this white-haired old man and in the prospect of his broken-down old farm, lay her happiness.

Mrs. Midgely and Mr. Mosely, with Eleanor and Spencer and one or two of the hotel guests for witness, were married in the Morley suite. Eleanor was beautiful and Spencer pleasantly this on the champagne he had provided for the occasion.

The Moselys live on the farm in Vermont. There are practically no modern improvements, so it happens that Mrs. Mosely, convinced for Mrs. Midgely's reputation, literally does carry the two buckets of drinking water to the bench outside the summer kitchen.

Every morning at six, the two of them get out on the endless expanse of this farm of theirs.

The winters are cold. Frozen snow full of hardship, but filled with a happiness. Springtime on the Mosely farm is delightful. Along about June, there arrive Eleanor and her two youngsters to spend the summer.

Spencer comes up, too, from time to time. He has recently advanced to a station in a loan of use to send dollars for purposes of meeting back fences, supplying new farm implements and installing electric light.

Japanese Tit-Bits

At Japanese Inns the traveler is told that "Dorothy duck" can be had at a reasonable price. The hungry customer visions a fat fowl, but the waiter brings in pieces of smoked fish about two inches long and as thick as a shoe. The menu also includes a pickled seaweed, seaweed jelly, a chicken, which resembles a piece of cotton, but is almost as hot as a chili. More than that cooked to be eaten by Japanese. How late to eat? Japanese eat early, early, early. A Japanese pickled salmon, or a white radish.

RUSSIAN PULPWOOD SITUATION MAY DEPRESS INDUSTRIES

The Industrial Committee of the New England Council considered the question of Russian embargo at its meeting in Boston on Tuesday, February 3. Appeals are being sent to the Council from all over the State urging them to protect the timber and woodlot resources of this State from crushing competition of Russian wood which is causing depreciation in the value of agricultural and wild lands, throwing out of employment and diminishing the amount of freight on the railroads.

Three letters are coming from wildland owners, woodlot owners, heads of labor organizations and industries, all of whom appreciate the fact that in purchasing Russian pulpwood, the American importer is merely helping Russia to build up a credit with which to carry out her five year industrial program which will permit Russia, within a few years, to depress the world market and become a free competitor in the raw materials but industrial products.

The world means depreciation, except at the moment when a war is going on. The rich, classes of American industry, looking to the near future if Russia is allowed to continue her imports of raw materials.

RESOLUTION
AT SNOW

250 Present from The South Paris Friday. Ford of Auburn Pri

At the second Oxford Removal Convention held last Friday a resolution urging legislative relief counties in financing work. It is hoped to aid the towns to the extent of $70 per mile paying $25 per mile. Several speakers pointed out that the removal of aid as those inland, much less snow.

Between 250 and 300 present, representing western counties of the State. Fred C. Sturtevant of the Harold C. Perham of the South Paris was in chair and A. H. Conant of the man of the committee which was served by the State. At the business session were returned officers were returned positions for another year.

A. J. Wiggins of the Department was scheduled on account of illness to come. F. W. Fort manager, was the president.

Mr. Ford said that about this matter, "Don't pay it. It is here to stay."

He is here to stay. In the affirmative. It is must have it. Presenters require it. Objectors farmers can't haul on the drifts. Objectors there will be more mud. There will be, but its duration more than a quarter of a century. Snow removal has viewed his experiences in removing snow, and self as thoroughly satisfied. Have two types if you can afford them, for the main roads, the narrow unimproved can have only one kind.

The rest of the session was largely a report of round table discussion phases of the snow removal problem. Snow removal has long enough to lose time, and men like to have the exchange of ideas, a free conversation, was profitable.

Following is the text of a resolution adopted at the meeting of the legislature.

Whereas the average materially in different States, especially between the coast line and the inland, and

Whereas along the coast line a greater amount of snow is accumulating, thus eliminating to a great extent the use of automobiles, and

Whereas the gas tax of the month of December, 1929, maximum amount that he called upon to reimburse the present law and

Whereas the specific legislation under State law is the same for a section and are steadily becoming thus causing greater difficulties located in the belt where the drifting most severe.

BE IT RESOLVED, That the legislature do enact, that a commission be appointed for snow removal in the State of Maine, consisting of 250 members representing the various counties, road problems, that the limiting the amount that reimburse the Municipality five dollars ($25.00) per removal be amended so would reimburse the Municipality of the total cost of each program as the State has out up to a limit of twenty dollars ($20.00) per mile as amended by the legislature now in session.

JOHN B. MAE ALBERT A. P. HERMAN, M. A. W. WESTON L. P. WIGHT R. F. JOSE, Sec.

It has been necessary of the matter contributed week's issue on account of work. All are in each week, but to condense when possible.

Mrs. Leamont Currier died in Portland for a few weeks. Favorable record from her.
